ABSTRACT

Black, native, and Spanish speaking Americans are the three main minorities mostly considered in this selected bibliography. The fourth minority included herein is women. The concepts and philosophies of the "new public administration" are evident throughout this bibliography. The overall tenor is one of a humanistic approach to the practice of public administration. It alludes to a very sensitive, linical, and compassionate delivery of services to the constituent publics. It speaks heartily to "equity" and "distributive justice." Moreover, there are several citations related to "citizen participation." The inclusion of a subsection of films, filmstrips, tapes, records, games and other media is provided as a resource to practicing public administrators in minority settings. These multi-media supports have proven their usefulness, time and time again in multiple settings. In addition to the theoretical, then, such aids add a stark, practical, and pragnatic dimension to this brief set of references. There is still a void in the wealth of literature that now exists on public administration when we look at the subset of minority public administration. Until such time when scholars and publishers produce this literature, we have to look at the present literature of specific minorities. (Author/JM)

A SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

FOR PUBLIC ADMINISTRATORS IN MINORITY SETTINGS

by

In the wealth of literature that now exists on public administration there is still a void when we look at the subset of minority public administration. Until such time when scholars and publishers produce this literature, we have to look at the present literature of specific minorities. Conceptually, we then bring this to bear on the complex problems that face public administrators who work with minority people. Whether they, themselves, are minority or otherwise.

Black, native, and Spanish speaking Americans are the three main minorities mostly considered in this selected bibliography. With the upward rise of Equal Opportunity legislation and the concomitant rise of the Women's Movement, any current bibliography that fails to deal with women as a minority is somewhat presumptious. Therefore, the fourth minority included herein is women.

In preparing this brief bibliography, the author refers to many materials that were brought to his attention by Dr. Pat Bidol of New Perspective on Race in Detroit. As a consultant her work in the area of racism and race relation is nationally known. Many thanks and acknowledge should be given to her as a primary resource person.
